

I would like to comment on a recent law passed that effected me personally. It was the law, outlawing other state broadcast channels, if local channels were available. First, I believe this tends to fringe on my right to choose. Second, I subscribed to my local area channels as well, so as long as I did that I don't understand why I cannot choose to watch another city as well, especially when my area shows programs at different times, etc. I also feel that our elected lawmakers in this country have quite a few more laws to pass other than restricting users of their television preferences. I feel this has gone too far for the government to put a limit on my choices of what to watch and what not to watch. What is next, will you decide what I can and cannot buy???

There are so many laws that need to be passed such as education laws, to further our children who are our future; protection laws-since September 11 I have no faith in our safety and protection laws; and many more. Congress get to work on real issues--I will think twice about my candidates in the future and ask who and what they will restrict from me in the future if they are elected. And we say we live in a free country.